
Public opinion is critical for the success of a representative democracy, but it is not clear citizens possess the political sophistication to effectively meet no ideals. To assess whether this is the case, this course introduces students to many facets of public opinion in the United States. S the topics we will examine are: citizens' political knowledge and attitudes, the role of elites and groups in opinion formation, and the extent to which elites respond to public opinion.

As a result of completing the course, you should be able to answer the following questions

What is public opinion and how do we measure it?

How sophisticated are Americans' views of politics?

What are the forces affecting public opinion?

Can public opinion play the role we expect of it in a democracy?

Your class participation consists of three parts.

First, you are expected to complete the readings and contribute to class discussion. If you must miss a class for a legitimate reason, such as illness, family emergency, or University sponsored activity, you should contact the professor as soon as possible. An absence is excused only if explicitly stated by Professor Rogers by email (therefore if you speak to Professor Rogers be sure to send a follow up email to confirm excuse). If you have more than three unexcused absences, your final course grade will be lowered by one point for each additional day.

Second, on the Blackboard discussion forum, you will be required to comment on readings for 6 Course Topics (excluding Topic 1). The below course outline has 12 separate topics.

Comments should address readings' main arguments, shortcomings, and questions you would like to discuss in class. Comments should not address textbook readings (e.g. Erikson). Blackboard posts should be at least 350 word(s). 5-ntac (1 0 0 1 325.49 380.59 Tm [

Third, you will present and lead discussion for reading. You will do this once by yourself and once with a partner. These presentations should respectively be approximately 10 and 15 minutes. Solo readings to choose from are designated in the Course Reading list by an asterisk (*). Partner readings are designated by two asterisks (). Presentations should:

- Describe the main point of the reading
- Explain what its contribution is to our understanding of public opinion
- Provide specific details of the study (e.g., its theoretical argument, hypotheses, evidence, analysis, etc.)
- Raise questions about specific theoretical or empirical issues that you did not understand
- Include a one page handout for fellow students

You will choose which readings you would like to present on August 26th

There will be two main written assignments in this course. They will require you to review and critique debates in the public opinion and elections literature. The first paper on the role of income and social issues in public opinion, and the second paper will focus on presidential elections. Each paper will be 7-9 pages. You will receive more specific details about assignments at least three weeks before the papers are due.

There will be a midterm and final exam in this course. Each exam will be open book, and open note format will be short answer and/or essay.

Your grade for this course will consist of the following components and relative weights:

When determining the final grade, the following grading scale will be used. I will round final grades. Depending on the distribution of grades, I reserve the right to impose curves to assignments and final grades.

Students should refer to the following SLU website for more information about Class A and B violations and the procedures following a report of academic dishonesty:

The following listing of topics outlines the subjects we will cover in class and the reading assignments for each of the topics. My intent for the course is to be more lecture focused on Mondays and discussion focused Wednesdays and Fridays. I ~~reserve the~~ ~~right to~~ make change to the syllabus as the semester progresses. You are responsible for any of the changes to the assigned readings. All of the articles and readings on the syllabus will be available on Blackboard.
